USE OF CONTAINER.

In very cold weather the difference of temperature inside the container to the external temperature may cause slight condensation as the day warms up. The containers are raised off the concrete on oak boards to reduce the cold transfer from the ground to the container and the containers all have vents to assist in the flow of air to reduce the chances of condensation. The weather in which the containers are loaded also has an effect, obviously it's best to load them on a dry day if possible! It is always advisable to cover things where possible as added protection as well.

TSS accepts no responsibility for damage caused by damp as it is the customer's responsibility/duty to ensure any and all goods loaded are dry when loaded, as this is the only way to prevent damp. Wet or damp goods will sweat in the container and produce condensation. This could also damage the container. Airing the container out is also advised to allow moisture in the air to be let out and air circulation to assist it drying if necessary
